Agree to your points and would just add the very positive feedback you got from BIT via CSAT. Well done.

Answer

Last quarter, I renewed all core AWS certifications (cloud practitioner, solution architect associate, solution architect professional) and completed three Google Cloud Platform certifications (cloud digital leader, associate cloud engineer, professional cloud architect). I balanced these alongside a 75.81% billable utilization rate. I've also been supporting colleagues preparing for their certifications by sharing resources and offering informal coaching sessions.

I contributed to presales activities by supporting the scoping of the new professional services workpackage for project phoenix and assisting the SIX account team with contextual input for their OCP renewal.

In terms of thought leadership, I published a blog post on how golden paths improve developer productivity to the Red Hat Blog and have two external talks upcoming at Kubernetes Community Day Budapest, and the Linux foundation open source summit. I planned and prioritized content creation early in the quarter to ensure consistency throughout the year.

I've maintained operational rigor—timecards and expenses were all handled within policy timelines. I also continued contributing to team enablement and mentoring, especially in areas like public/hybrid cloud, devx, and security through the skills mentoring program and ad-hoc.
